CRIMINALS BEWARE

COPS P3 Multimedia-Based Training is out to get you!

Imagine an offender free as a bird because of a lack of communication and cooperation between police and probation officers. Not in Pinellas County, Florida! "Criminals need to beware of the Multimedia-Based Training that law enforcement officers are getting" says Robin Callahan, Project Manager, SPJC. St. Petersburg Junior College and the Community Policing Institute of Florida partnered with Sealund & Associates to create dynamic multimedia that trains law enforcement agencies to communicate with each other, share information about offenders, and understand the relationships between each agency's mission, role and scope.

Simulation And Training Zones

Mapping offenders turfs is the beginning to isolating potential problems in the community. Once an offender is pinpointed, communication and cooperation of law enforcement agencies becomes essential. Now, armed only with the mouse, the officer can step into actual scenarios after walking through the training zone. "This real life multimedia training aids officers in seeing first hand the value of probation-police partnerships--it has proven a major breakthrough in fighting crime" says Eileen LaHaie, Project Director (COPS), SPJC.

First Person Journey To Arrest An Offender

Imagine as a probation officer, through Partnership, you just found out that your offender was caught committing a felony. Do you give him an early court date? Consider as a police officer you are ready to make an arrest for theft. The situation is questionable - Is it his rent money after all? However through Partnership, you just found that he violated house arrest. Do you still make the arrest?

Eyes In The Back Of Your Head

"Offenders use information gaps to their advantage by violating the terms of probation without law enforcement's knowledge. The P3 solution: Probation-Police Partnerships gives these officers "eyes in the back of their head" states Mac McMullen, Probation Officer, City of Seminole, Florida. "Sealund & Associates went to extremes to really understand my role. Tim Brock, Creative Director at S&A, traveled with me on my routes to mapping offenders; they got right in there to learn the details of my operation." Using multimedia training to solve crime reaps an immense return on investment.
